GOOD READING FOR THE DAY

Here is a part of the late Robert J. Burdette's seventeenth birthday sermon which appeared in the Los Angeles Times not long ago:

"How does it feel to reach the official limit of life? Well, there is no shock. You knew all the time it was coming. You come to harbor expectantly, don't you? As Frederick the Great said to his grenadiers, receding for the third time before the flaming thunder of the Austrian guns—'What, then, do you want to live forever?' No matter how smooth and beautiful the sea, no matter how pleasant the ship, you want to get to port sometime; you want to get home some day; you don't want to sail round and round forever. There is a better world than this, a fairer one; lovelier skies. This world isn't a treadmill. It's a country through which you are journeying, the way of your pilgrimage, leads somewhere. Don't you want to get to where you are going? Or are you like Booker Washington's old colored woman—'Where you going, auntie?' 'Lawd bless you honey, I've done bin whah I'm gwine.'"

"One very impressive feeling comes to you on the morning of your seventeenth birthday. If you believe as I do, this is your last birthday anniversary. No more birthdays. Why, if you look at it through my spectacles, you're through with time. This is the beginning of eternity.

"Some men passing on from this point say, 'Now I am living on borrowed time.' Not much you are not. There is no such thing as borrowed time. It's the freest gift in the universe. I may live for five years yet or ten. If I do it will be on the same kind of time as composed the seventy years I have lived already, not one of which was borrowed. If you borrow anything you expect to repay it. Well, you can't pay back any time. If I went to the only One who can give me time, I'd as soon ask for a thousand years—it's only a watch in the night to Him—as for a day. I could repay the one as easily as I can the other. 'Lord, let me have a couple of thousand years!' 'Surely, man, when will you give them back?'

Old-Fashioned Mothers.

Some of us still have old-fashioned mothers. Not a woman of the period, painted and enameled, with all her society manners and fine dresses, white jeweled hands that never felt the clasp of baby fingers, but a dear, old fashioned mother with a sweet voice, eyes into whose clear depth the love light shone, and brown hair just threaded with silver, lying smooth upon her faded cheek. The hands, worn with toil, gently guided our steps in childhood and smoothed our cheeks in sickness, even reaching out to us in yearning tenderness.

Blessed is the memory of an old-fashioned mother. It floats to us like the beautiful perfume of some wood blossoms. The music of other voices may be lost, but the enchanting memory of her's will echo in our soul forever.—Ex.

LUKE McLUBE SAYS

When a wise old crow of 30 scares a lad of 21 into marrying her, part of the performance is to have the bride's mother sob around the house on the day of the wedding because her daughter is being "robbed of her girlhood."

A man buys a new hat because the old one is greasy or shabby. A woman buys a new hat because the style has changed.

A lodge emblem that is so big that it makes one side of a man's coat sag down never adds much to his importance.

A man never brags much about the prizes he won at Sunday school when he was a boy. But he doesn't mind letting you know that he led his own gang and stole apples and whipped all the kids in town. And he usually adds with a grin that he was a devil among the girls.

A married man can be the head of his own business and yet not be his own boss.

It may be embarrassing to a girl to have you look her over. But she would rather have you look her over than over-look her.

When the germ of suspicion gets a half nelson on the microbes of love, the honeymoon goes out and hunts for another home.

We are growing so good that the day may come when Anthony Comstock will have authority to arrest a man who exposes his naked eye.

Some of the gray stockings you see, the girls wearing look as though they might have been white when they were first donned.

Father can always see where, with a little economy, the family could get along with one pint of milk a day instead of three. But if mother suggests that they also use economy and get along one case of beer a week instead of four, father wants a divorce.

The reason why a man knows he is a good provider is because he gives his wife just enough money to pay the grocery bill and the milk bill every week and lets her have the pleasure of stalling the off the rest of the collectors.

A wise girl can always make her ideal man conform to the plans and specifications of the boob who wants to marry her.

Some men are so queerly constituted that they can enjoy going to a friend's funeral because it affords them a free ride and an afternoon off.

There are a lot of connecting descriptions of Heaven. But our idea of Heaven is a place where there is a fish for every fish worm.

A girl is so anxious to convince you that she has a warm heart that she hates to wear any covering over it in winter.

General Impression.
"Quite a lot of doctors writing for the magazines these days."
"Yes, and it is a surprise to me, too."

"Why so?"
"I didn't know a doctor could write anything that anybody could read except a druggist."—Pittsburg Post.
